Apple Rubber Energy Supply Announcement

While there has been an increased focus on global geopolitical tensions and their potential impact on international energy networks, we want to assure you that our manufacturing operations remain highly stable and continue to run smoothly.

We have received inquiries regarding the future of our energy supply, and we understand these broader market concerns. However, operating entirely within the United States allows us to remain highly insulated from the direct energy rationing or international grid strains seen elsewhere in the world. While it is true that domestic data centers are consuming more power and shifting national energy demands, there are currently no energy allocations or rationing protocols active or projected for our industrial sector.

Specifically, our facility's electricity is supplied by NYSEG (New York State Electric & Gas) within their Lancaster division. According to NYSEG's officially filed state reliability reports, our local division historically maintains an exceptionally low frequency and short duration of interruptions. Because of this reliable infrastructure, we project 100% energy availability with zero operational or scheduling curtailments across our 90, 180, and 365-day manufacturing horizons.

Our team continues to maintain strong relationships with our utility partners and keeps a close eye on local regulatory updates and regional infrastructure conditions. While there are signs of shifting macro energy demands globally, we have not observed any immediate effects on our production capabilities or our current customer commitments.

As always, we remain dedicated to supporting your business and providing the high level of consistent, reliable service you expect from us. We will keep you updated should any significant regional changes occur.

Thank you for your continued partnership and trust. For any further questions or additional information, please contact info@applerubber.com.
